Neurodiversity and Aging

Intersectional Life Course Perspectives

Edited by Shari Brotman, Marie-Hélène Deshaies, Laura Pacheco, Samuel Ragot, and Aglaé Mastrostefano

This textbook weaves together current issues in research, policy, and practice with stories of hope and struggle among people aging with neurodiversity and their family carers in order to raise awareness and to illuminate salient themes.

Addressing a significant gap in the available global literature from a critical and intersectional perspective, this textbook explores the complex and unique health, social, and familial issues that may arise as people age, with attention to such challenges as parallel aging, mistreatment, mental health, dementia, service silos, and housing. At the same time it celebrates diversity, strengths, agency, pride, and identity through the stories of 21 neurodiverse older adults and 15 parent and sibling carers. This textbook argues that training, education, and policy change are fundamental to the development of meaningfully inclusive services that are especially needed in light of the significant gap in both the understanding and development of best practices with this population.

This textbook addresses all these aspects by naming issues and providing solutions for direct and indirect practice. With useful classroom material including case-studies and reflection questions, it will be an important tool across such disciplines as Social Work, Social Gerontology, Medicine, Psychology, Nursing, Recreation, and Disability Studies.
